THE KIDRON TO HOLLYWOOD CONNECTION

What do Jacob Miller, an Amish man that farms 30 acres in northeast Ohio, and Brad Pitt, the Oscar-nominated, high profile movie star, have in common? They both shop at Lehman's, the country's most famous old-time hardware store.

Where else could Jacob find the butter churns, cream separator and glass milk bottles he needs for his cows? And where could Brad (or more accurately, his production staff for The Assassination of Jesse James by The Coward Robert Ford, an epic Western) find copper kettles, cast iron cookware and a coal shovel?

Providing merchandise to movie production companies looking for historically accurate period pieces is a growing segment for Lehman's. Founded by Jay Lehman in 1955 to serve the local Amish in northeast Ohio, Lehman's stock a huge selection of non-electric appliances, wood stoves, hand tools, old-fashioned kitchenware, toys and much more in its winding retail store, huge catalog and award-winning e-commerce web site (www.Lehmans.com). At Lehman's, everything old is new again.
